UK Union Catalogue of Chinese Books

Following the successful completion in August 2002 of a project funded by the Research Support Libraries Programme, there now exists a UK Union Catalogue of Chinese Books. Particular attention has been paid to the development of a simple and intuitive search interface, enabling researchers to search in both original script and romanisation terms.

The entire thrust of the project has been to produce an original script catalogue in the truest sense, and to keep romanisation to a minimum. However, a large number of titles have been included, so it is recommended that for the time being searching should be done in both original script and romanisation to ensure a reliable result. As the Catalogue grows, it is hoped that the original script entries will become more complete.

During the course of the project, great attention was paid to setting up procedures for ensuring that it would be simple and inexpensive to maintain the data. Participants have continued to contribute their current cataloguing work, which is regularly incorporated into the database. But needless to say, the Union Catalogue of Chinese Books participating institutions, which at any given time will usually be more complete. Furthermore, there are many smaller collections that are not currently included in the Catalogue, but which it is not held somewhere in the UK.
